

Benefits of studying via distance: Enticing everyone to get an education

There are many benefits of studying via distance as it enables you to participate in a course or gain a qualification even if you are working full time. Many people do not have enough time to commit to study because of other major responsibilities. Distance education fulfils your dream of gaining an education even when you are employed or at home taking care of your children.

Being able to have time for work, household chores, family bonding and still get an education, is one of the major benefits of studying via distance.

Enrolling in distance education will allow a worker, a mother, a disabled person, or just about any busy person to further their education. Do you fancy being able to attend classes while you are on your coffee or lunch break or while you are doing your laundry, babysitting, eating in the dining room or even in your pyjamas?

Those who suffer from anxiety or peer group pressures excel when studying via distance, as the triggers that create barriers for them in a traditional learning environment are no longer present.

With just a personal computer and an internet connection, you can acquire a qualification. In the four corners of your bedroom, or any room in your home you can participate in online classroom discussions, take an exam, ask questions from your teacher, or research data for your homework.

There are many people who forego higher education so as to work for purposes of survival. They would work for years and save money for their tuition fees in the future. With distance education, you would be able to work and study at the same time. When you are at home after work, you can go online and start attending classes. Time management is an essential factor here, however the flexibility of studying when you can or when it suites you creates many more time opportunities than if you were restricted to structured classroom lessons.

Distance education is also advantageous to parents, especially mothers, who have a family to raise and take care of. During their free time, they can turn on their computer and participate in their online classes or open up their study manual. One of the benefits of studying via distance education is you do not have to be physically present like that in a traditional school, with study material or course activities delivered directly to your door. You would be able to adjust any class or assignment schedule to a convenient time for you.

Education is important and it can give the promotion or the confidence an employee needs. There are also plenty of accredited training organisations and universities that offer distance education nowadays so that they can reach out to as many students as they can who would like to benefit from their services. If you are one of those who do not have time and the resources for a traditional school, distance education would be a big help to you. It can help you achieve bigger dreams and greener pastures.

It is now possible to go to work at the same time and acquire an education with distance education. The latter is less costly than traditional schools because transportation fees, living away from home, parking and child minding expenses are eliminated.

Additionally, some courses are cheaper via distance, as the cost of the course no longer needs to cover the overheads of classrooms, facilities along with teacher's time and wages in teaching. With distance course costs going towards the production of course material, certification expenses, teachers marking or assessment time, support via phone calls or emails with students.

Ensure you speak to your accountant, as you may be entitled to claim a tax deduction for your course cost and education expenses.

I personally have completed several Certificate IV level studies via distance and found it to be rewarding and less restrictive as I could enrol any time of the year to start the course, where often in class courses you have to enrol at the beginning of a semester and could only progress to the next unit or assessment with the rest of the class.

The advantage and benefits of studying via distance education will entice just about anybody who wants to earn a qualification for their self-development.

For information on the courses and qualifications you can achieve with Dowell Solutions via distance study click here.